MOVING FORWARD

— BY GEORGE JOHNSON

Awaiting a shotgun start at Pinebrook Golf Club on one of those picture-postcard-perfect late August mornings Travel Alberta publicists dream of, the captain laid bare the winter ambition of he and his team.

"If you look around the league," said Mark Giordano back then, as ever playing the amiable host at his immensely-successful Italian Open annual charity golf soirée, "100 points gets you in the playoffs for sure.

"That's got to be our goal.

"Ninety-something is usually the cut-off, but 100 gets you in for sure. That's what we know. We have to get there.

"That has to be our mindset, not just to sneak in."

Certainly expectations were lofty, both here and in other environs, for the Flames to continue their ascent.

A late, determined push to propel them into the playoffs a year prior had established a minimum requirements standard. The ensuing summertime additions of hard-edged defenceman Travis Hamonic and high-profile goaltender Mike Smith wedded to an array of some of the league's top young talent — Johnny Gaudreau, Sean Monahan, T.J. Brodie, Dougie Hamilton — all ignited expectations.

Those 100 points Giordano targeted, as things turned out, were not to be.

But there certainly proved to be no end of ins-and-outs, peaks-and-valleys, as well as surprises (both good and bad) to the 2017-18 season.

As early as Oct. 4, as the team was readying for its campaign curtain-raiser three hours north in Edmonton, 45-year-old Jaromir Jagr — the second highest scorer in NHL history, trailing only No. 99, Wayne Gretzky — officially signed a one-year, free-agent deal to don the Flaming C.

"Everyone compared to my age is a young guy," Jagr joked at his introductory media conference. "The last 20 years I've played with young guys."

At the time, he was only 57 games away from eclipsing Gordie Howe's all-time regular-season record of 1,767, a number for so long regarded as insurmountable.

"If I can reach it, especially with a Calgary Flames jersey on, it's going to be special," Jagr acknowledged. "But I don't want to look that far."

"100 POINTS GETS YOU IN"

— MARK GIORDANO

“THE LAST 20 YEARS I’VE PLAYED WITH YOUNG GUYS”

– JAROMIR JAGR

From then on, until Jan. 29 when the injury-bitten Czech legend cleared waivers and was assigned to his hometown team HC Kladno of the Czech Extraliga, Calgary found itself awash in an army of number 68 jerseys, faux mullets and Traveling Jagr photo-ops.

It took awhile but on Nov. 4, Jagr opened his scoring account as a Flame, goal number 766 of a mind-bending career – at the Scotiabank Saddledome, fittingly – cashing a sublime cross-ice pass from Gaudreau.

“Of course, any first goal for any team is special, especially in Canada,” Jagr confessed afterwards. “I can see how much the fans appreciate it, hockey, how much they love hockey.

Since the first day I’ve signed here they have been so good to me, so I try to play my best.”

There were, during his stay, hints of the old form, moments, even stretches, but persistent injuries and a 45-year-old body conspired to undermine the fascinating comeback bid, player and club eventually agreeing to part ways.

His final Calgary stat line read: 22 games, one goal, seven points.

“I get to say I played alongside Jaromir Jagr,” marvelled winger Curtis Lazar. “That’s something pretty special.

“He was playing in the NHL when I was still in a crib. I mean, you could hear in the background: ‘(Mario) Lemieux sets up Jagr!’ and I’m a baby in a crib.

“Just having him here, seeing the buzz around the city, getting to know him in the dressing room has been great.

“It’s something you can always look back on. He’s a sure-fire, first-ballot Hall-of-Famer. You look at what he’s accomplished and the numbers he’s put up. It’s fun to be able to say you’re a part of it.

“A small part, granted, but still.”

During the month of November, Calgary’s number one line of Gaudreau, Sean Monahan and Micheal Ferland set a torrid pace, ranking among the league’s most venomous, piling up a collective 47 points (23G, 24A) along with 115 shots on goal.

Not since the early ’90s, when future Hall-of-Famers Joe Nieuwendyk and Sergei Makarov were partnered with left-winger Gary Roberts, had a unit put up those types of gaudy numbers in this town.

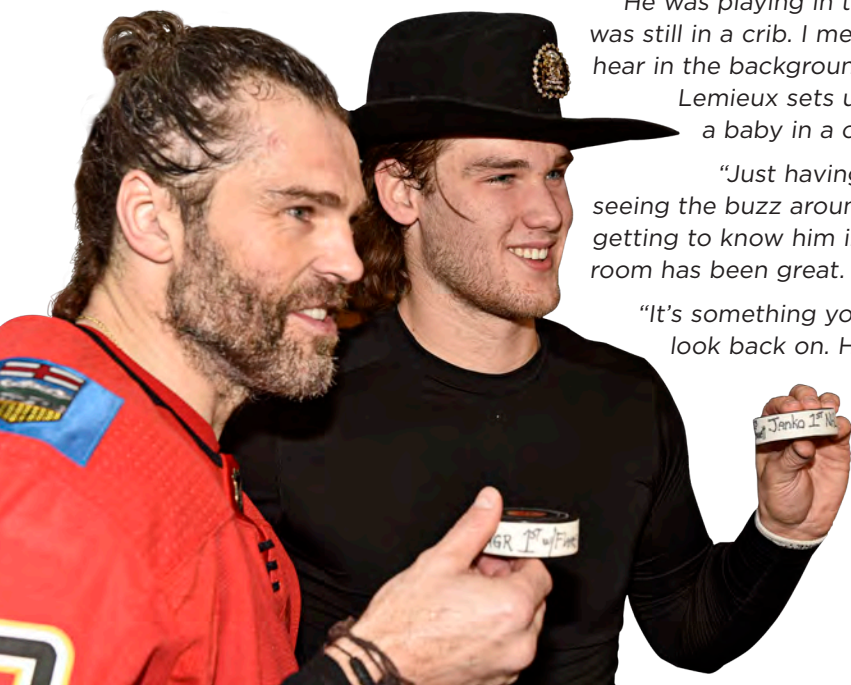

“You have Makarov as Johnny, Nieuwy as Mony and Roberts as Ferly,” reasoned Flames’ head coach Glen Gulutzan at the time.

“I can see that.”

Of the lavishly gifted Gaudreau, no less an unassailable authority on point production than Jagr, Gulutzan said, “With his talent he can win the scoring (title) every year. It’s just up to him.

“He’s so quick. He’s so good one-on-one. He always keeps skating. It’s tough to shut him down one-on-one. When he’s skating like this it’s kind of impossible. If you double-team him he’ll always find somebody open.”

Another of the key components was Smith, the uber-competitive

35-year-old acquired from the Arizona Coyotes to provide a sense of stability between the pipes.

"Just his overall compete and focus on a daily basis are what's been most impressive, to me," lauded Flames' goaltending coach Jordan Sigalet, speaking of his new pupil. "How badly he wants to win and even at his age, the desire to get better. He says he wants to treat practice like games and - I know, I know - that sounds cliché.

"Well, you watch him.

"He's angry when he gets scored on. But - and this is the thing - he doesn't let it affect him. He's able to put things behind him, to push past it. Which is important, in this market, playing as many games as he is."

Smith was so solid over the first half of the year that he found himself chosen to hob-nob with the game's elite alongside perennial pick Gaudreau during the mid-season All-Star Game weekend in Tampa.

After rolling off a seven-game win streak from Dec. 31-Jan. 14, the Flames had positioned themselves nicely, a single point from second in the Pacific Division and tied for sixth in the Western Conference.

Midway through February, GM Brad Treliving fast-tracked a piece of his most important off-season business by signing centre Mikael Backlund to a six-year, $32.1-million contract extension.

"This," assured the fulcrum of the 3M Line, "has always been my mindset.

"Our goal our whole time was to sign here and stay in Calgary. Since the first day I got here, and then (fiancée) Frida got here, we've loved the city.

"This is where we wanted to be; where we wanted to stay."

The Flames' fortunes started to take a downturn in the wake of a league-mandated five-day break as they struggled to regain lost traction. In the final analysis, problems at home and on the powerplay conspired to spoil their ambitions.

A mounting injury roll call of cornerstone players down the stretch certainly didn't help either.

A sampling:

Kris Versteeg (hip).

Mike Smith (upper body).

T.J. Brodie (upper body).

Matthew Tkachuk (upper body).

Travis Hamonic (upper body).

On April 9, the club shut down leading goal poacher Monahan for the remainder of the season and confirmed what everyone watching had been speculating for weeks: Its number one centreman had been playing banged up. Extremely banged up.

Still, the extent of Monahan's problems - four surgeries, two for hernia issues, one each for wrist and hip - was startling. Amazingly, fighting through pain for a lengthy stretch, he'd still managed to equal a career best for goals (31), establish a career high in points and contribute 11 game-winners, one off the franchise best set by Joe Mullen back in the Stanley Cup-winning year of '88-89.

"Mentally it sucked coming to the rink knowing you don't feel 100 percent," acknowledged Monahan later. "But if you went in the dressing room there's so many injuries that no one will ever hear about. It's unfortunate, having to get surgery but something has to be taken care of. I want to play for a long time . . . I'm still really young. So taking care of this, I've gotta come back next season a lot better and a lot stronger."

The concussion sustained by Tkachuk on an awkward backwards fall against the NY Islanders on March 11 at home, also proved a crippling blow. The second-year winger had already eclipsed his rookie output in goals and points.

"When Chucky got hurt," lamented Smith, "it hurt us.

"Really hurt us.

"You can't replace guys like that simply because there aren't many like him anywhere in the league."

Midway through a dispiriting seven-game losing streak low-lighted by a lack of goal production, the Flames were officially eliminated from playoff contention, on March 26, following a 3-0 loss at the Staples Center in downtown L.A.

On March 21 against the Anaheim Ducks at the Scotiabank Saddledome, some much-needed good news, as long-time centreman Matt Stajan logged career game number 1,000. Because this city had gone through personal heartbreak with Stajan and his wife Katie when they lost their newborn son Emerson four years ago, the achievement carried additional emotional resonance.

"I'm just trying to go about my business," explained the centre of attention on the morning of the milestone, three-year-old son Elliot in tow. "When you start cheating or start looking for things to come easy . . . it doesn't work that way in this world. When you work hard - no matter what it is you do - stick with it through the tough times.

"That's just the way I was raised. I've never changed my mindset.

"When you're in the NHL for five, six years, you still don't take it for granted because that's what you've dreamed of.

"I've always tried to remind myself of that."

Eight days later, pre-game at home to the Columbus Blue Jackets, the 318th player in league history to reach 1,000 games received his commemorative silver stick, and Elliot was presented with a mini replica of dad's cameo-keepsake.

There was one final moment for the Flames faithful to savour, as freshman Mark Jankowski connected for four goals - reminiscent of Sam Bennett's rookie turn back on Jan. 14, 2016 versus the Florida Panthers - as the Flames rolled over the season's surprise package, the Pacific Division-champion Las Vegas Golden Knights, 7-1 to close out their campaign.

Immediately afterwards, the self-analysis began in earnest.

"Performance when things were very much on the line," replied Treliving, asked for a specific area that he felt needed immediate addressing heading into the off-season. "We talked about that internally throughout the year.

"I don't think there's an 'Ah ha!' moment. There are certain mile-markers in your season, important moments, and far too often we fell short in those moments.

"That's probably the biggest red-flag for me: We fell short at critical junctures. Critical junctures in the season. Critical junctures in games.

"Is that personnel? Is that mentality? Whatever it was, it became a theme and that's the biggest area we've got to look at."

The positives: Gaudreau became the first Flame since Theo Fleury (66) a quarter-century earlier to reach the 60-assist mark and collected more points, 82, than ever before. Monahan, despite missing the final dozen games due to the myriad of injuries, tied a career high at 31 goals, and set a new personal standard for points, at 64.

Ferland, meanwhile, reached the 20-goal plateau (21) for the first time and D-man Dougie Hamilton tied for the lead among all NHL defencemen, alongside Tampa's Victor Hedman, in snipes (17).

Over the course of a season we were introduced to a roll call of Flames of the future, including Spencer Foo, Rasmus Andersson, Andrew Mangiapane, Jon Gillies, and David Rittich.

The junior and collegiate draft-pick cupboards are rich in potential with the likes of Juuso Valimaki, world junior gold-medal winner Dillon Dube, Matthew Phillips, Adam Ruzicka and Harvard do-it-all defenceman Adam Fox.

Still, the sting of the premature elimination remained and couldn't help but linger through the summer. Along with a vow, a resolve, to begin atonement upon reconvening for training camp come September.

"This isn't where we thought we'd be," sighed Giordano, seven months from that day out at Pinebrook Golf Club.

"This isn't where we think we belong.

"We have a group of guys in here who, I think, could bounce right back. This team, and the way it's been assembled . . . it's a good team.

"I believe that.

"This one, for me, is the toughest. Maybe because it's the freshest. But I don't think that's exactly why.

"It's more because of the expectations we had for ourselves.

"This one hurts."

How most accurately to describe, or measure, or calibrate, that hurt? Which emotion from the Pandora's Box of disappointment best reflected the overriding feeling?

Anger? Disbelief? Desolation?

"It's everything," replied Tkachuk. "Going home on April 10th . . ."

A soft shake of the head.

"I think with the guys we have in the room, the talent we have . . . We're a good team on paper. We proved during stretches we were a top-tier team in the NHL.

"Something didn't go right for us.

"I think the natural reaction is to be angry, to be mad, but you have to channel that and make sure this never happens moving forward." ■

Mark Giordano finished his 12th season with the Flames and fifth as captain with 13 goals and 38 points. He also played all 82 games for the fourth time in his career and suited up for his 700th NHL contest on Dec. 4 at the Scotiabank Saddledome when he recorded an assist during Calgary's 5-2 setback to the Philadelphia Flyers.

Giordano tied a career high that he set last season with four game-winning goals. He also set a new personal standard with a pair of overtime goals to lead the Flames to a 2-1 win over the Pittsburgh Penguins at home on Nov. 2 and to help Calgary edge the Chicago Blackhawks 4-3 at the Saddledome on New Year's Eve.

In 73 games with the Flames in the 2017-18 season, T.J. Brodie scored four goals and added 28 assists. It was the fifth-straight season that he surpassed the 30-point plateau. Brodie registered his 200th career NHL point on an assist during Calgary's 5-1 road win over the Tampa Bay Lightning on Jan. 11.

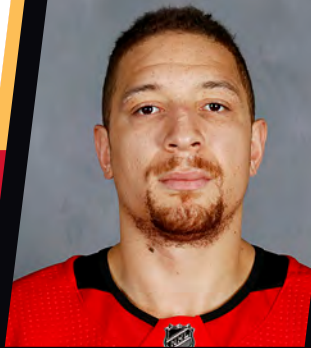

Brodie, who is just nine starts away from playing in his 500th NHL game, tied a career high with four points when he scored twice and set up two others during Calgary's 6-3 win over the visiting Winnipeg Jets at the Scotiabank Saddledome on Oct. 7.

For the second time in his nine-year NHL career, all with the Flames, Mikael Backlund suited up for all 82 games. He finished the season with 14 goals and 45 points, while recording 11 multi-point performances.

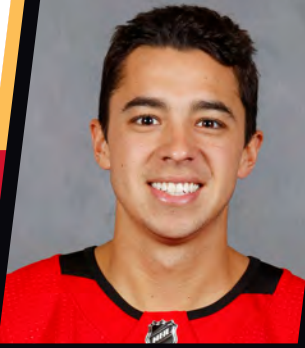

Backlund celebrated New Year's Eve at the Scotiabank Saddledome in style by putting up two assists during Calgary's 4-3 overtime win over the Chicago Blackhawks in his 500th career NHL game. Backlund set up defenceman Mark Giordano's game-winning goal just 52 seconds into the extra session to snap Calgary's three-game losing streak and start a stretch of seven wins in a row for the Flames.

Johnny Gaudreau set career highs for both assists (60) and points (84) while also scoring 24 goals in 80 games with the Flames in 2017-18. His 60 assists were the most recorded by a Flames player since Alex Tanguay set up 59 goals during the 2006-07 season.

Gaudreau tallied a goal and three assists to lead the Flames to a 6-3 victory over the Winnipeg Jets at the Scotiabank Saddledome on Oct. 7. He then put together an impressive 10-game point-scoring streak from Oct. 27-Nov. 20 as he scored eight times (including goals in six straight outings) and added 11 assists. Gaudreau played his 300th NHL game on March 7 and marked the occasion by setting up two goals during Calgary's 5-1 road win over the Buffalo Sabres.

Calgary signed veteran NHL forward Jaromir Jagr to a one-year contract on Oct. 4 and he made his debut with the Flames a week later during a 4-3 overtime win in Los Angeles over the Kings. Jagr scored his first goal for the Flames on Nov. 9 and added an assist during Calgary's 6-3 win over the Detroit Red Wings at the Scotiabank Saddledome.

During his time with the Flames, Jagr recorded a goal and six assists in 22 games before returning to his native Czech Republic to finish the season with HC Kladno, the team he owns.

Mark Jankowski burst onto the scene with the Flames in 2017-18 with 17 goals and 25 points in his rookie season. When Jankowski found the back of the net, it was a good bet that the Flames would win as they compiled an impressive 11-1 record when he scored.

Included in Jankowski's totals were three game-winning goals, including one in Calgary's final game of the season when he scored four times to lead the Flames to a 7-1 win over the Vegas Golden Knights at the Scotiabank Saddledome. Jankowski also notched game winners at home on Nov. 30 during Calgary's 3-0 win over the Arizona Coyotes and on March 7 when the Flames beat the Sabres 5-1 in Buffalo.

Sam Bennett suited up for all 82 games, a career high, in his third season with the Flames and finished with 11 goals and 26 points. Included in his totals were six multi-point games.

Bennett tied his single-game career-high of four points when he scored once and set up three others during Calgary's convincing 6-1 road win over the Vancouver Canucks on Dec. 17. Just eight nights earlier at the Scotiabank Saddledome, Bennett notched the game-winning goal to lead the Flames to a 4-2 triumph over the Canucks. That capped off a seven-game stretch that saw Bennett record three goals and five assists.
